1	The seminar portion of this class is awful, but don't let that dissuade you from taking a clinic that interests you. The clinic experience is awesome.	Mar 5, 2012 12:38 PM
2	Doing an externship is fun but time consuming. Sitting through Scherr's class is miserable	Feb 8, 2012 2:34 PM
3	The opportunity to work with real lawyers in a government agency, court, etc. was invaluable. I loved my placement and learned a ton from working there. However, the seminar component (2 hours once a week, with readings, journals, interviews with Prof. Scherr, two papers), was painful. The readings are complete fluff, and class discussions were boring and useless. Thus, writing papers (what Prof. Scherr would call the "reflective" aspect of the clinic experience) was incredibly soul-sucking. My placement was in Atlanta, and you have to be on-site 10 hours a week ... between the time spent in class, preparing for class, driving to and from Atlanta, and actually being at my placement, the Clinic took up (easily) 20 hours a week. Big commitment for only 4 credit hours... think carefully before signing up!	Feb 6, 2012 5:59 PM
4	The externship you do is probably worth it, but the class itself is difficult to get through because you have to sit for two hours without a computer. Plus, the material might not apply to your externship. Its boring, but the class itself itself labor intensive.	Feb 6, 2012 10:47 AM
5	While the internship portion of the class is wonderful, the in-class portion is less helpful. Additionally, your grade is based entirely upon participation in class and reflective journals. This seems great, but even when you are getting very positive feedback on both from the professor you may end up with a lower grade than expected.	Feb 6, 2012 9:44 AM
