1	Imagine a discussion class, where a professor engages his students in thoughtfully guided debate on that day's assigned reading. Now throw that image away. If you like your opinions spoon-fed to you, having your commitment to the law constantly called into question, and being humiliated in front of your peers for not immediately recalling obscure New Zealand statutes in cases the professor doesn't seem to have read himself at all, you'll love military law! 2	The Socratic method and adversarial style is more intense in the first part of the semesters, it declines later on. Prof Shi being a former military Judge Advocate General has a lot of stories and opinions on the topic. He is a very friendly professor that you can get in touch with all the time, he will usually answer emails well within 1 hour. The paper topics are very broad, he gives some suggestions but you can make your own. The readings are moderate and generally the cases are easy to follow.	Feb 6, 2012 2:46 PM
