1	This class is very interesting and low intensity. Professor Gabriel is kind and knowledgeable.	Mar 5, 2012 12:42 PM
2	Great class. Interesting material and Prof. Gabriel does a great job relating difficult material.	Feb 20, 2012 2:10 PM
3	The professor had no prepared lecture- he just showed up and hoped students would talk. Then for the last 3 weeks, he actually made the students teach the class by making us give presentations. He literally did nothing during those three weeks. Grading is really random.	Feb 13, 2012 9:45 AM
4	Our final grade consisted of a 20 page research paper (topic of our choice that related to race and law) and a 15 min. presentation to the class about that research.	Feb 9, 2012 2:31 PM
5	This is a good class if you're interested in race issues. The classes are discussion-based, and the professor doesn't call on people unless nobody volunteers (but usually this isn't a problem). Discussions are nice in that you get to hear other perspectives, but I feel like I didn't learn anything new from them. For the final paper, you get to choose your own topic, and I learned a lot from doing research for my paper. Overall, this class is relatively stress-free and interesting.	Feb 8, 2012 2:16 PM
6	We had a paper at the end of the class, though sometimes he does an exam. The day-to-day class was discussion-oriented, but if no one talked, he would call on people. I found it interesting. The readings were a bit long, but one didn't have to read into them that thoroughly since there was no exam.	Feb 6, 2012 9:36 PM
7	A lot of interesting material presented. However it was repetitive at points, and since it is a seminar and there is controversial subject matter, it can be tough to give alternative viewpoints (not because of the professor, he encourages alternative viewpoints- because of your classmates). All in all a pretty interesting, pure seminar class. Not very intense and graded by a paper in which the topic choice is very broad.	Feb 6, 2012 2:44 PM
8	If you're used to critical race theory and like it or want more of it, this is probably not the class for you. Having taken lots of critical race/gender theory classes in college, I found the class very frustrating, because it was not a very nuanced discussion. Prof. Gabriel also was not super receptive to pushback in discussion; while I agreed with 99% of what came out of his mouth, on some issues there was at least room for disagreement and discussion, but Prof. Gabriel did not seem to leave much room in the way he presented the material. Grading on the papers was generous, but I still wish I hadn't taken this class.	Feb 6, 2012 9:30 AM
