1	It was hard to follow lecture in this class, we mostly answered problems assigned in the reading and it wasn't always clear what the answer was. A good supplement is a worthwhile investment.	Mar 2, 2012 2:05 PM
2	If you've taken a Smith class before, expect the same. If you've taken a UCC course before, expect the same. Course is taught around the UCC Section 9 (which is incredibly confusing). Unless you expect to work in lending law or some other related field, you could probably learn all that you really need about the subject from a 2-hour perusal of wikipedia/bar-review materials. 3	The course focuses very narrowly on Article 9 of the UCC. I would only take the class if you were specifically interested in lending transactions after law school (I'm not- the course just fit my schedule and it's lightly tested on the bar). Prof. Smith is difficult to follow and I was totally confused about what was going on on a daily basis -- partly b/c learning the material is like learning a foreign language, and partly b/c Prof. Smith has a really convoluted way of explaining things. On the positive side, he proceeds VERY SLOWLY (like only 5 pages of reading a night, and if we didn't get through the assignment, no new assignment for the next class), is a really nice guy, and gave a very straightforward exam. 4	Material can be dry but Smith is very knowledgeable. Have to keep up with the problems each day as that's pretty much all class is.	Feb 6, 2012 3:32 PM
5	This class is the worst. Don't take it if you don't have to. Professor Smith assigns problems from the reading and thats how you learn all the material, but he doesn't actually give you a straight forward answer in class. At the end of the course you realize you can't use the book or your notes to help you prepare for the final. The final is bizarre and not even written well. Avoid this class!	Feb 6, 2012 12:44 PM
